By Nora Boustany Washington Post Service BEIRUT - Gummen fired at a convoy of ambulances and two truckloads of emergency aid as res-cue workers tried Friday to enter a Palestinian camp, and the shooting set off a battle in which an Iranian Embassy guard was killed. A gunman shot at the tires of the

A Lebanese bodyguard from the Iranian Embassy was killed when the shooting escalated into a battle in which mortars and tanks were in which mortals and tanks were used by soldiers and militamen ringing the camp. The Iranian Embassy con-

Soviet Dissidents Call Off Protests After New Assault

Bonn May Put TWA Suspect on Trial

BONN (WP) — The West German government is leaning loward, putting a suspected Lebanese terrorist, Mohammed Ali Hamadeh 22, on trial here rather than extraditing him to the United States to face Garges that be helped bijack a Trans World Airlines jet in 1985, officials said Friday.

The government currently favors a trial in West Germany because it is concerned that an extradition of Mr. Hamadeh would effectively be a "death sentence" for two West German businessmen held by kidsuppers in Lebanon who are seeking Mr. Hamadeh's release, the officials said. The officials emphasized that no decision has yet been made, and that the government was not under pressure to decide soon. They said that a trial in West Germany appeared to be the best of the government's three alternatives: to extradite Mr. Hamadeh, to try him in West Germany or to swap him for the two businessmen.

Banning of Black Athlete Ignites Apartheid Protest

Seventy-three white competitors from Natal said they would boycott the sports event, scheduled to begin Saturday, and the sponsor of the annual competition, the Sports Foundation of Southern Africa, announced that it was withdrawing its involvement in protest.

agency Tass reported Friday. "Our evaluation of that war and your views on it do not coincide," Tass quoted Mr. Gromyko as telling Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Ve-layati of Iran, who is on an official visit to Moscow.

"Common sense suggests that the main attention should be paid not to the past but to the future to ensuring that the war be discon-tinued," Mr. Gromyko said.

He said the Soviet Union wanted to see the war ended as soon as possible. Moscow is officially neutral in the war, but supplies Iraq with most of its weapons.

Iran has said it would pursue the war until the Iraqi president, Sad-dam Hussein, is overthrown.

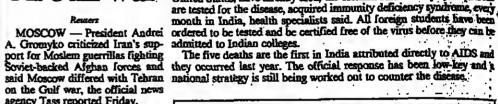

Mr. Gromyko told Mr. Velayati that Soviet troops would withdraw from Afghanistan when a political settlement of the conflict was achieved.

Police Fire at Karachi Protest March KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) -At least one person was injured Friday when the police opened fire on a crowd of protesters demanding the release of Mayor Abdul Afghani of Karachi and 98 city councillors. The officials were arrested by the Sind Province government during a tax protest march Thursday.

The provincial government announced that the city officials would be detained for seven days on charges of violating a ban on political activity. The city government was dissolved for six months and a provincial official was appointed to manage the city. On Thursday, the mayor and 200 councillors tried to march on the provincial assembly to demand that motor vehicle taxes collected in Karachi be turned over to the city government to help meet the costs of maintaining roads.

At least 12 councillors were injured in clashes with the police. Karachi has been hit by a wave of violence in recent months that has left more than 200 people dead. Most of the violence was prompted by ethnic and political divisions.

General Fidel V. Ramos, the chief of staff of the Philippines armed forces, ordered an investigation on Friday into reports that troops gunned down civilians on Tuesday in the first engagement after the two-month truce between the government and Communist insurgents ended on Sunday.

The civilian deaths, coming so quickly after the end of the ceasefire, are precisely what Mrs. Aquino has said she feared most. If the reports are true, they could set back the hopes of the government either for regional cease-fire agreements or for a return to negotiations in the near future.

The panel, headed by John Tower, a former Republican senator from Texas, has been able to assemble an extraordinarily detailed account of the Iran-contra affair, the sources said, because it had access to excerpts from Mr. Reagan's personal notes, interviewed the president twice and received copies of thousands of computer messages sent by National Security Council staff members. The West needs to heed the message if it is to protect the carefully assembled international structure for handling refugees. The resettlement over the last decade of almost two million Indochinese refugees has been a remarkable humanitarian en-deavor, led by the United States. Across the country, churches and volunteer groups have refurbished houses, stocked cupboards, found jobs for and welcomed into their communities Vietnamese, Laotians and Cambodians by the thousands.

The experience has brought many Americans to believe that resettling people in the United States is what refugee work means. In fact, most of the work, whether by individual countries, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees or nongovern-mental agencies, is overseas. Two-thirds of the U.S. budget for refugees goes abroad. Settling refugees in the United States, France, Australia or wherever is the last choice of refugee workers. The first is repa-tivities for a state of the state of the states of the state of triation. Since refugees by definition face a well-founded fear of persecution if they go home, this is possible only if things at home change. The second solution is resettlement in the region, in the country of first asylum. Only when the first two are impossible is resettlement in a third country undertaken. In the case of Vietnamese and Cambodi-

The United States welcomed 111,000 refngees from Indochina in 1979, 200,000 in 1980, 159,000 in 1981. Then the resettlement process slowed. Today some 15,000 of the Cambodians first sent to the Khao I Dang camp remain in Thailand. They have no family in the United States, are mostly rural and uneducated and so rank lower on the classification scale than those who came earlier. Many of them were judged ineligible for having given inconsistent stories or for associations with the brutal Khmer Rouge regime. Thailand, unwilling to settle them permanently, has closed the camp and says it will move them back to the border. Fifteen thousand lives are in jeopardy. So is the refugee program generally if other first-asylum countries do not see to it that Thailand gets help. Thailand has mostly done its part, but needs to persevere a little longer. In the meantime, the U.S. Embassy there, the State Department, the Immigration Service and the White House have to get back into the act. That means additional money.

Just as important, it means supporting the UN High Commissioner in his talks with Thailand about how to handle the Khao I Dang refugees short of returning them to the border. Refugee workers say many cases have been arbitrarily classified as incligible and need further review. Additional remedies are available, notably finding ways to admit the refugees under other ions of law. The issue of Indochinese pr refugees is still open.

The Paid-for Congress

Say what you will about the integrity of individual members of the U.S. Congress, the lack of a precise correlation between campaign contributions and votes in committee or on the floor. All the qualifications are true, and none of them matters. The math is too strong; America has, if not a bought, at least a paid-for Congress.

We had the issue for breakfast last week; the story was thet Senator Lloyd Bentsen, on becoming chairman of the Finance Committee, had set up a breakfast club through which lobbyists could contribute $10,000 each to his re-election campaign two years hence; Senator Robert Byrd had done the same on regaining his post as majority leader. Mr. Bentsen has now disbanded his club; Mr. Byrd stubbornly has not. But these are only the most egregious examples of a meal that goes on all day.

The likelihood is that just the victors in last November's elections - the men and women who are now the members of Congress - will have spent more than $300 million in their campaigns. That is up a fifth from only two years before, nearly five times the total speat 10 years ago. That is not inflation; prices only doubled in that period. It is a Roman circus.

About a third of the winners' campaign funds will have come from political action ces, or PACs. These are the new pattern of giving both reflects and rein-forces this. Those who eventually won, mostly incumbents, raised two and a half times as much money, on average, as their opponents in last year's House races. The PACs accounted for this. They are neither sentimental nor dumb; they gave six times as much to winners as to losers. About 180 House members - two fifths of the House - received more than half their campaign contributions from PACs. Strangely enough, the Senate, where a seat now costs more than $3 million on average, is more restrained. Winners there took only about a fourth of their funds from PACs. It is said that, to some extent, the PACs cancel one another out, that they often represent competing interests and have only turned the traditional business of tugging at Congress into a kind of team sport. Thus, of the 30 largest PACs at a recent count, 17 represent unions, some of them narrowly based but others longtime battlers for broad social legislation. The rest of the list is easier to categorize — the Realtors, the American Medical Association, the home builders, the milk producers, automobile dealers, life insurance compani bankers, dentists, trial lawyers, the National Rifle Association, a pro-Israeli group.

There is a correlation, if not with each every vote of the members, at least with their committee assignments. The consumer group Common Cause did a study of the House Banking Committee in 1982. Its 47 members got $4.2 million from PACs, of which a fourth came from financial, real estate and construction groups. Is it wrong? At some point it becomes so; the point is long past. Some senators, led by David Boren and including Mr. Byrd, who has learned to preach while passing the collection plate, are calling for public financing along the line of presidential campaigns. Maybe. Others will have other ideas. But something has to be done. The present system is intolerable. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Exploring Billbay Moscow's 'New Deal'

SATURDAY-SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 14-15, 1987

By Jerry F. Hough

D URHAM, North Carolina - Mikhail Gorbachev's policies have caused real confusion in the United States. After the last plenum of the Central Committee, for example, we gave far too much signifi-cance to a meaningless suggestion about a secret ballot in party elec-tions but ignored the simultaneous based on foreign investment, which could be absolutely crucial. We just do not have a framework for under-standing the Soviet Union.

In the past, we saw the Comm revolution as an overthrow of Peter the Great's Westernized elite and a break with Russia's natural evolution toward constitutional democracy. Now we accept Richard Pipes's view that Lenin's system was a continua-tion of the Russian tradition. The earlier interpretation was correct. The supporters of the Commu-nist Revolution in Russia were newcomers to the city, drawn in large numbers by a pell-mell industrializanumbers by a pell-mell industrializa-tion program. The strange Western values, the insecurity of the market and Westernized (often foreign) peo-ple pushing transformation filled them with fear and anxiety. They responded to Lenin's program be-cause it rejected these for old commu-ral Busine unberge nal Russian values.

The youth of the post-Stalin period, however, have not shown such a rejection of Western ways. Rather, they have thirsted for jazz, blue jeans and Western films. Now the 20-yearolds of the 1950s are the 50-year-old bureaucrais of the 1980s - although in the past we correctly called them the "educated middle class."

The Westernized elite of Peter the Great has been reconstituted, and most bureaucrats want more change than Mr. Gorbachev. Like him, they do not want real elections, for they fear that non-Russians would vote for separatism. But they want an opening to Western ideas and a loos-er one-party dictatorship. We also should remember the lessons of protectionism. Soviet manu-facturers have total protectionism, for they do not lose business when The deal for the middle class is technology is imported and they are not forced to export and compete in clear: a looser political system in ex-change for the lash of foreign eco-nomic competition. It is an easy offer actly what the free-trade textbooks for Mr. Gorbachev to make, for the export strategy will require that Soviet society develop an intimate knowl-edge of the outside world. What is more, in order to break the American technological blockade, Moscow needs to focus foreign policy on im-proving relations with Europe and Japan. That means Moscow will have to make concessions to Europe and Japan and decrease the number of troops facing Europe to reduce fears about investing in the Soviet Union. It is hard to say how far the changes in policy and system will go. Mr. Gorbachev's reforms will be like the Nary Deal only more fundamen. the New Deal, only more fundamen-tal, and no one could judge the ulti-mate meaning of the New Deal by what Roosevelt had done by 1934. But with the broadly educated Soviet population eager for reintegra-tion with the West, and a leader de-termined to catch up with the rapidly industrializing countries like South Korea or even the advanced countries, the change is likely to be more drastic than we enticin

We in the West must adjust our thinking to new realities if we are to cope with Mr. Gorbachev's chal-lenge. We smugly think Mr. Gorba-chev needs a nuclear agreement with us. Instead, he is more likely to conchude that he needs to exaggerate the dangers of the Strategic Defense Ini-tiative to justify an improvement in Soviet technology. The only areas over which we still have leverage are our attitude toward joint ventures and our willingness to negotiate reductions of troops in Europe. Yet Mr. Gorbachev's Europe-Japan oriented foreign policy now gives us little leverage even there.

Why Not Run the Risk of Peace in Central America?

N EW YORK — Never become "so obsessed with failure," President Reagan warned us in his State of the Union Message, as to refuse to take risks "that could further the cause of peace and freedom."

Characteristically, the president is right in stating a principle. Characteristically, he is wrong in turning its meaning upside-down. wrong in turning its meaning upside-down. Nicaragna is the prime example. Congress is nearing a decision on whether to pour additional millions into support of the contras. Mr. Reagan, acting the bold leader, challenges Congress and the American people to take a risk. The goal is to force the Sandinist revolution into the American democratic mold. But the risk?

There is no risk in asking Congress to vote a W IDORC I could not have been alluding to that. But there is a risk — a huge risk — in taking the next logical step. That, clearly, is military action by U.S. troops when it becomes necessary to "save" Hon-duras or Costa Rica (or both) from a contraprovoked "invasion," or to guarantee the "independence" of a contra-created secessionist Indian state on the Caribbean coast. However it comes, U.S. military action when the contras fail has to be the risk Mr. Reagan has in mind. What this risk entails will be a setback for years or decades to "the cause of peace and freedom" in the hemisphere. It would mean, first, a lengthy military occupation of Nicaragua (the last one dragged on intermittently for more than 20 years, with disastrous results); second, alienation of every friend the United States has left in uses to justify its odious occupation of Afghani-stan. This is not a sensible kind of risk to take. There is, however, a risk that the United States should take. It is a harder choice than the alternative. It has not been fairly tried in the past six years. It involves patience, restraint, sophistica-

(and at one time accepted by Nicaragua). Obviously that is not all that Mr. Reagan is interested in. He is interested in ousting the Sandinists altogether. The only effect of his po-licy has been to consolidate their power, to drive them further into the hands of the Soviet bloc and into increasing disregard for human and civil rights. As the latest Americas Watch report on Nicaragua, released Monday, makes clear, the administration has done "a major disservice to the cause of elsewhere." This Reagan-Shultz policy is not merely counterproductive; it is self-destructive. The question is not how to use America's immense power in a vain effort to subvert the Sandinist revolution. It is how to use that power to ensure that the Sandinists pose no threat to the United States or to their neighbors, and to edge To follow that course means a reversal of Mr. Reagan's policy. It means the United States would still be taking a risk; but, for the first time in this administration it would be a risk genuine-

Big Brother May Close : This Book

Ð

By Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON - At a dinner one night in the Soviet Union, a diplomat pointed to the ceiling and, without looking up, everyone at the table podded. His was the universal reminder that there could be a listening device in the ceiling and we had better watch what we said. Wa did, and for a moment the conversation went dead. No one can kill a good discussion like Big Brother. It is stretching things a bit to say there is a Big Brother watching U.S. presidents, but something like that is happening, Investigators looking into the Iran affair are seeking, and have been granted partial access to, Rouald Reagan's personal notes.

At the same time, we are told that Congress is considering subpoenaing notes made by Mr. Reagan's biogra-pher, Edmund Morris, who has been granted unparalleled access to the White House and the president. Once a month, be meets with Mr. Reagan.

a month, be meets with Mr. Keagan. The rest of the time, he can sit in on most meetings of his choosing. There is not much that Mr. Rea-gan, or any president, has done that meets with universal approval, but the selection of Mr. Morris did. He is as fine a bitchical hiepstraher as as fine a historical biographer as there is. His 'The Rise of Theodore Roosevelt" won the Pulitzer Prize, and many people await the second " volume of that work like kids would a circus. Mr. Reagan offered Mr. Mog-ris the best of all deals: no constraints. Few public figures would make such an offer. We all want to hold our own mirror.

But the exemplary arrangement Mr. Reagan made with Mr. Morris will come to naught if Mr. Morris's notes are subpoenaed. Even the talk of a subporna is bound to have a chilling effect on the relationship. In 1973, I was subpoenaed by Vice President Spiro Agnew and ordered to turn over my notes about his investigation for bribery. My sources dried up. No matter how many assurances I offered that I would never reveal my sources, they chose to do the prudent thing. They shut up. Maybe Mr. Reagan will be unde-terred by the talk of subpoena and continue to confide in Mr. Morris. Maybe he will also, at day's end, jot down perfectly candid notes, complete with disparaging remarks about some of the people who crossed his path that day. I do not know. But it is fair to assume that with investigators seeking his notes and those of his biographer, the president will react much as I did in Moscow when a hand pointed to the ceiling. The demands of history and those of law are on a collision course here. Law should take precedence if-it seems clear that a crime has been committed. That was the case with Richard Nixon's tapes and so they were subpoended. In the course of reading those transcripts, we learned not only about the Watergate burglary and the cover-up, but how ugly Mr. Nixon could be. His offhand remarks — bitter, bigoted and mean - were shocking, but they had little to do with whether or not crimes were committed. He might have talked civilly and still directed a cover-up. With Mr. Reagan, there is still no evidence that he broke the law in selling arms to Iran or with subsequent diversion of some of those funds to the Nicaraguan contras. Ab-sent that evidence, Congress ought to respect the right of a president to hold confidential meetings, make confidential notes and confide to a hiographer without someone peering over his shoulder. There are indications the Nixon precedent has not gone unnoticed in the White House. Notes and records for certain meetings seem not to exist - maybe for fear of demands that they eventually be relinquished. That is reprehensible. But the same fear of disclosure that chills the encaky and deceptive will have an effect on honest and forthright people as well. No president would be quite as candid if he thought that his remarks could make the headlines a year down the road, and ont of context at thet. History is not an abstraction. It has real utility. It instructs, and the presidents of today are wiser for the histories written by and about their predecessors. Congress will head down a dangerous path if it subpoenas Mr. Morris's notes. In secking the truth, it may ensure that we never get it. Washington Post Writers Group.

even produce items that South Korea exports, let alone Japan. Mr. Gorbachev eventually will have to bring about fundamental re-form in heavy industry, but his first step must be an export strategy for manufactured goods and the encouragement of foreign investment. systematizers of the campaign process. There were 600 of them when Congress enacted campaign finance reform in 1974. There are 4,100 now. They gave $12.5 million in the earlier election cycle, an estimated $140 million in the one just completed. The PACs have fueled the campaign spending spree of the past 10 years; these special erests now account for twice the percentage of campaign receipts that they did before Congress moved to limit their role.

The average House winner now spends about $300,000 to get elected, up from perhaps $90,000 m 1976. Forty percent of this money comes from PACs. Incumbents are generally re-elected in House races. The

Cheers, Kicks in Moscow

The mass release of Soviet political pris- certified as insane are not political offendoners poses an interesting problem for Westerners: finding the right response between churlishness and gullibility. A good formula for praising the opposition was once advanced by Randolph Churchill. By all means do so when deserved, urged Winston's father, but be sure to accompany every kiss with a kick.

So all credit to Mikhail Gorbachev for what be has done, but only if he keeps kicking at the system be is trying to reform, with its dirty tricks and unsavory practices that have packed Soviet jails. The wonderful news is the freeing of scores of prisoners of conscience, from dissident poets to democratic socialists. What seemed inconceivable two years ago now appears wholly imaginable: the release of all political prisoners whose names are known, some 800 in all. As many as 280 prisoners are said to be already approved for anmesty, and every day brings new arrivals from what Dostoyevsky in czarist days called the house of the dead.

But conspicuous among the missing are 70 or so prisoners held in psychiatric facili-ties, among them free-trade union activists like Alexander Skobov and Vladimir Gershuni. Only one of the recently freed prisoners, Sergei Belov, came from a psychiat-ric hospital. The claim that disaidents ers cries out for exposure and rejection. Then there is suspicion on the part of human rights monitors like Helsinki Watch that KGB interrogators are "working over" prominent prisoners like the psychiatrist Anatoli Koryagin, reportedly released but still in fact detained. The standard trick used in similar cases has been to delay release and extract an admission of guilt, while concealing news of an amnesty. Another KGB stratagem is to accuse po-litical offenders of criminal charges, like the allegation of drug possession in the case of Alexei Magarik, a Hebrew teacher, or nonpayment of alimony in the case of Serge etushkin, a former diplomat who has been active in the independent peace move ment. Then there are the old standbys of "parasitism" or "hooliganism."

Finally, the campaign has left mostly untouched the largest group of prisoners of conscience, religious believers. In what looks like a further KGB attempt at sabotage, plainclothesmen in Moscow on Thursday broke up a demonstration on behalf of a jailed Jewish activist and mauled Western reporters on the scene. Those responsible truly need a good kick, and if Mr. Gorbachev delivers it, that would be a kick heard round the world.

ABM: End the Slithering and Have an Honest Debate

By Charles Krauthammer

WASHINGTON - There is a story, no doubt too good to be true, that W.C. Fields was found reading the Bible on his deathbed. Asked what he was doing, he replied: "Looking for loopholes." The Rea-gan administration, in similar health, has sat down with the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty, a document less uplifting but far richer in ambiguity. And in an obscure addendum, it thinks it has found salvation. Most of the world understands the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty to prohibit testing, development and de-ployment of these missiles. So did the Reagan administration, until October 1985. Now the administration, wanting to do advanced testing for the Strategic Defense Initiative, has found a loophole. The treaty's Agreed Statement D allows testing of ABM systems based on "other physical principles" than those known when the treaty was signed in 1972. This loophole opens up on some

If, as Roy Godson writes in "A Plas aue of AIDS Slurs Against America" (Jan. 27), the Soviets have been engineering a massive disinformation campaign by stating that AIDS is a CIA-created virus, they probably took a page from an American journalist's text. Such a move would have the virtue SDI seeks invulnerability. These are of focusing the issue. STAVANGER, Norway -- Norway plans to expand the search for oil and gas in the Barents Sea, close to the Soviet northern fleet's base on the Kola Peninsula, an Energy Ministry official said Friday.

Oslo and Moscow have disputed for 14 years where the median line in the sea should be drawn. Both sides have agreed not to explore for oil and gas in the disputed zone while talks are deadlocked.

Norway produces about one miltion barrels of oil per day from North Sea oil fields, but these will begin to run dry by the end of the century. Gas has been discovered in the Barents Sea, but little exploration has been carried out.

Scientists Find High Concentrations of Poisons in Droplets By Boyce Rensberger Washington Post Service WASHINGTON --- Scientists have found that toxic fog, made up of microscopic water droplets containing unexpectedly high concen-trations of pesticides, herbicides and many other chemicals, forms over at least some parts of the United States.

They said the fog may be among the causes of a mysterious decline of forests in the United States and Europe upon which the water droplets settle.

Writing in Thursday's issue of the magazine Nature, the researchers said they have found that fog samples collected in Beltsville, Maryland, and in the San Joaquin Valley in California bear concentrations of some toxic substances that are thousands of times higher than had been predicted by a widely used law of chemistry.

The research was done by Louis A. Liljedahl and Dwight E. Glotfelty of the U.S. Agriculture Department's Agricultural Research Service in Beltsville and James N. Seiber of the University of California at Davis.

Among the 16 toxic compounds identified so far are such insecticides as diazinon, parathion and malathion and such herbicides as simazine and alachlor. All were de-

The new research shows, however, that fog droplets can concentrate the vapors to far higher con-centrations than exist in the air. "I think there is a very great potential for these waterborne organic compounds to damage crops and forests," Mr. Glotfelty said. Much of the forest decline seen in parts of the eastern United States and Western Europe has been attributed to acid rain but many environmental scientists say they believe acid rain alone cannot account for all the damage. "It could easily be toxic organics," Mr.

Glotfelty said. The scientists said their findings came as a surprise because the concentration of toxic compounds was much higher than had been predicted using Henry's Law, a standard works of art auctioned at Sotheby's, Christie's or the Salle Drouot. By contrast, the Florentine pietra dura casket acquired Nov. 26 for $187,000 at Sotheby's New York, for the Minneapolis Institute of Art, is directly relevant to what goes on every day in auction houses --- if only because until recently few institutions would have thought of going after the decorative arts of 18th-century Italy.

After filtering out dust and other solid particles, the scientists found the fog liquids to vary in color from nearly clear to pale yellow. All the samples had a "foamy, soapy appearance."

The story of its purchase as told by Michael P. Conforti, chief curator of the Institute, illustrates a new style of museum collecting, as discreet as it is efficient when quick action is needed. The casket was first seen by Conforti last September. In addition to overseeing the acquisitions policy of the museum, Conforti also is curator of decorative arts and sculpture. On a visit to Sotheby's department of European works of art he noticed an ebony casket with elegant floral compo tions in polychrome marble, lapis lazuli and agate set into slate. People-Watchers Of Beaubourg

By Charlotte Mosley DARIS - The Centre National d'Art et de Culture Georges Pompidou, familiarly known as the Beaubourg, is celebrating its 10th anniversary; it has been an occasion both for self-congratulation and soul-scarching. When it comes to numbers, the center has been an undoubted success: 7.6 million visitors a year on average. This compares with 4.2 million for the Eiffel Tower and 3.2 million at the Louvre; the Museum of Modern Art in New York attracts a mere 1.3 million. Only Disneyland entices a greater number, with 10 million visitors a year. Such statistics are balm to the French Ministry of Culture, and to the center, which swallows up 384 million francs (about $63.5 million) a year in operating costs. François Léotard, the minister of culture and communications, has just allo-cated 45 million francs for an extension to the permanent modern art collection.

But despite the overwhelming quantitative success, questions are being asked about the Beaubourg's capacity to fulfill its original objectives. At its conception, in the heady days of the late 1960s and early '70s, the center was designed to be more than a museum of 20th century art; it was to be a multidis-"space," encompossing a perma-nent collection, temporary exhibitions, a library, a center for industrial creation and a research institute for contemporary music. Thus culture would be taken out of its traditional confines and made accessible to a new and wider public. To this end the controversial design by Richard Rogers and Renzo Piano was chosen.

Cracks soon began appearing in this utopian scheme and succe reorganizations have limited and defined the different areas of activ-ity. In 1985 the floor that houses the permanent collection was transformed by Gae Anlenti, de-signer of the recently opened Orsay The vast entrance hall resembles

"The Visitor and His Image," an entertaining exhibition at the cen-ter organized by the B.P.I., the library, goes some way towards answering whether the Beaubourg has succeeded in its ambition to bring culture to the people. The exhibition, which runs through March 16, provides an assessment of who goes to the Beaubourg and why

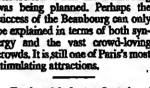

The average Beanbourgeois is male (60%), 29 years old, with at least a baccalaureat (66.5 percent). He is French (61 percent) and lives in Paris (35 percent) and more like-ly than not is on his way to the fibrary. The working class make up only 3.5 percent of visitors. What these figures suggest is that, by and large, the public of the Pompidou center is the same as that of the Louvre, i.e. a cultured minority.

For the potential visitor some useful statistics emerge from the show. The busiest day is Saturday, the busiest hour 4 P.M. and the busiest month April, followed closely by August.

Once inside, perhaps you can identify with one of the four behavioral categories isolated by the ex-hibition. If you have been attracted by the architecture and the view of Paris from the roof and never bother with the library or collections then you are a "wanderer." If you are determined to see everything ciplinary, open and flexible and miss nothing you are "compul-"space," encompassing a perma-sive." Or maybe you go regularly for a specific purpose, usually the hibrary, in which case you are "sedentary." Finally, you are an "ecleo-tic" or "ecstatic" amateur respectively if you visit the temporary shows or permanent collection.

These categorizations suggest that most visitors have a specific purpose in mind. Perhaps this is an argument for splitting up the cen-ter's activities. Dominique Bozo resigned last year as curator of the permanent collection over lack of

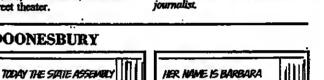

But despite every criticism. Beanbourg does work and has ful-filled many functions and needs among its huge public. ONG KONG - Student protests that broke out in more than 10 major Chinese cities during the last two ious program of educational reform that was set in motion more than two years ago.

Since 1985, the government has been applying to the academ-ic sphere reforms that have transformed the Chinese economy by decentralizing administrative control and weakening the ideological grip of the Communist Party.

Under the reforms, administrators were given the freedom to offer a wider choice of courses instead of a rigid compulsory curriculum, to recruit talented students outside the state plan and to use examinations and scholarship programs to weed out the unqualified. These changes introduced a degree of competi-tion, academic choice and elitism into the educational system that would have been considered heretical only a few years before.

The experiments also gave students in China's elite coastal universities — the institutions that led the demonstrations — a taste of educational freedom and upward mobility that raised expectations and fueled their discontent with the pace of reform in the rest of Chinese society.

It was no accident that the universities that led the student movement - the University of Science and Technology in Helei, Jiaotong University in Shanghai and Qinghua University in Beijing — had pioneered such radical reforms as the phasing out of mandatory political education, the introduction of elective courses and the discussion of Western liberal thinkers like Freud, Dewey and Hume in their philosophy classes. It was students from these elite universities who ultimately stepped forward to test the limits of intellectual freedom in China - a freedom that they had first tasted in the changes that were transforming their own institutions.

But today, as conservatives gain ground in a struggle to reassert the Communist Party's supremacy and its monopoly over decision-making, all of these reforms hang in the balance.

The reforms were set in train by a 1985 document, "The Reform of China's Educational Structure." This report, which involved consultations with more than 10,000 academic experts, was drafted by a specially created super-ministry, the State Education Commission. It called for the massive expansion of educational opportunity at every level.

The document gave special priority to higher education --- the only sector capable of producing the skilled manpower needed for China's economic modernization. Colleges and universities were called on to increase their output of graduates from 1.12 million to 10 million a year by the end of the century. The philosophy behind the reforms aimed at bringing the rigidly specialized higher education system — which still oper-ates according to a 50-year-old Soviet blueprint — closer to a

EW YORK — When it comes to school reform, Americans tend to move in fits and starts. In the late 1950s, following the launching of Sputnik hy the Soviet Umon, Congress phraged into a major effort to improve the quality of public schools, especially the teaching of mathematics, science and foreign languages. The motivation then was a perceived military threat to the nation's security.

schools are not turning out the skilled workers needed for a technologically oriented economy, while governors and other state-level political leaders fear that, in the absence of strong public schools, the economies of their states will stagnate.

"Maybe what we should do," suggested Ernest L. Boyer, president of the Carnegic Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, "is get the Japanese to shoot a Toyota into orbit." Even without such a visible symbol of the newest threat to its national well-being moving across the skies, the United States is again turning its attention to improving its schools. In the last three to five years, legislatures and boards of education in virtually every state have enacted legislation designed to improve the performance of their students.

Forty-one states, for example, have increased the number of core academic courses that students must accrue in order to earn a high school diploma, while aperior teachers or tightened the requirements for teacher training. Under the "fits and starts" theory, it might be assumed that the school reform movement would be starting to lose its momentum. Instead, it seems to be entering what educators and others are calling its "second wave."

After several years of attention to the structural and financial side of primary and secondary schools, reformers are beginning to focus on new, and much more complicated, issues related to the teaching and learning process.

"We're discovering that improving schools is a lot more complicated than we first thought," said Frank Newman, president of the Education Commission of the States, which monitors education changes at the state level. "We have to figure out how to get students to go beyond rote learning and be more creative. We have to address questions like student and teacher motivation, which are a lot more subtle."

The reason for the concern was driven home last month when the latest international comparisons on mathematical performance were released at a meeting of the National Academy of Sciences in Washington. Data from three major studies showed that Americans ranked "among the lowest of any industrialized country."

Researchers attributed the relatively low perfor-mance of American students to a variety of factors. including repetitious curriculums that dwell too long on basic arithmetic at the expense of more demanding topics and prevailing cultural anitudes that view mathematics as a relatively simple subject that is far less important than reading. One of the new reports came from the Second International Mathematics Study, the largest cross-cultural analysis ever conducted of mathematical achievement. The document, entitled "The Underachieving Corriculum: Assessing U.S. School Mathematics from an International Perspective," reported that American students simply do not take as much mathematics as their peers in other countries. "In most countries, all advanced mathematics students take calculus," it stated. "In the U.S., only about one-fifth do."

Such statistics began to raise eyebrows in the early 1980s, and many states, such as Florida, began to look for ways to improve their schools. The reform movement really took off in April 1983 when the National Commission on Excellence in Education, appointed by former Secretary of Education Terrel H. Bell, issued a stinging report entitled "A Nation at Risk."

Western model of general education.

Overspecialization in the university curriculum, which limits students to courses specifically related to their major field, bad resulted in widespread apathy and discontent. In some universi-tics, absenteeism at mandatory lectures on the history of the Communist Party and Marxist theory ran as high as 70 percent.

The 1985 document encouraged administrators and teachers to experiment at the local level, but their willingness to do so depended on their ability to transcend ideological barriers set by the party. Until the recent demonstrations, they had achieved some measure of success. The recent unrest — and the Western liberal ideas that inspired it — has triggered a backlash by the party conservatives who have put those barriers firmly back in place. The atmophere is now one of caution and self-censorship

The party's fear that the educational reforms croded their ability to control intellectuals was not without basis. In recent years, administrators and academics in China's clice universities had enjoyed unprecedented autonomy from the central govern-ment. But as the party reasserts its authority, this freedom is likely to be severely diminished.

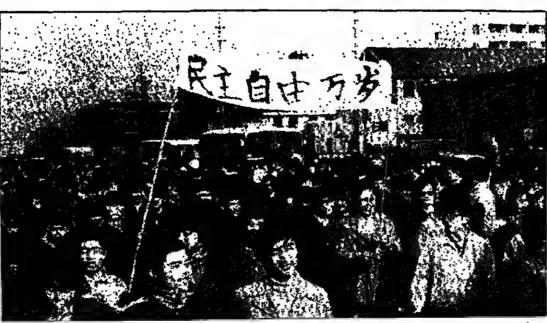

The most striking feature of the 1985 resolution - now the most threatening to party bureaucrats — was the introduction of the presidential system. Under this system, top administrators at chite universities were elected by a committee of academ-ies rather than appointed by the party. This change ran parallel to China's factory "manager responsibility system" in shifting power away from the party to the university president. But the recent dismissal of the elected vice president of Hefei University of Science and Technology, Fang Lizhi, a noted physicist expelled from the party for his reformist views and ARIS --- When hundreds of thousands of students took to the streets last December, they were reminding Prime Minister Jacques Chirac that French governments tamper with education at their peril. The issues, a senes of university reform measures, became obscured by the death of a 22-year-old student after he was beaten by police. Before the student, Malik Oussekine, died, the government had already withdrawn some of the main points of the law that had offended the students, including an increase in fees and selection for university places.

After the tragedy, the government withdrew the law in its entirety and the junior minister in charge of higher education, Alain Devaquet, resigned. The Devaquet law attempted to deal with a problem that has preoccupied French governments for years: overcrowding in French universities and a staggeringly high number of students who drop out before they finish degree courses.

Former Prime Minister Raymond Barre, a member of the centrist Union for French Democracy and a once prominent economics professor, estimated that three out of five French students left university in their first year. All French students with the baccalaureate high school leaving certificate have the automatic right to a university

The most promising students go to the Grandes Ecoles, elite establishments founded in the 18th century that have a rigorous selection process. Such schools provide France with many of its leading politicians, administrators, scientists and entries of interest. For Mr. Barre, the Devaquet law would have introduced much-needed reform but had been badly explained and presented in a way that made the students "bristle."

The most famous student protests came in 1968, a year when the post-World War II "baby boom" filled universities to capacity all over Europe.

Then, it was conditions at a University of Paris campus at Nanterre west of the capital that triggered riots that eventually paralyzed the country in May of that year and precipitated the departure of President Charles de Gaulle a year later.

Before the protests were taken over by the more politically minded, students complained of appalling study conditions, such as having to sit ou window-ledges during classes be-cause of inadequate lecture halls. The Nanterre campus was finally closed in the 1970s.

In succeeding years, under Presidents Georges Pompidou and Valery Giscard d'Estaing, any hint of education reform could be guaranteed to bring both university and high school

Critics Sound Alarm As Student Debt Soars

EW YORK - Ann VanCott and Mike Usman fell in love and got married two Vision field in love and got married two years ago when they were both first-year students at the New York Medical Col-lege in Valhalla, New York. They started off mar-ried life with $66,000 in college and graduate stu-dent loans, n figure that will climh to $234,000 when they get their M.D. degrees and to $334,000 in 1992, when they figure that will climh to $334,000 in 1992. when they linish their residencies and must begin paying off their debt.

By 2008, when the loans will have been retired, the husband-wife physician team will have put more than $1 million of their collective income into debt service. "And this doesn't include malpractice insurance," Mr. Usman noted.

The red ink dripping from the VanCott-Usman family budget is a sign of how a new force — student debt — is reshaping the financial structure of American higher education and, many fear, having social consequences far beyond the college campus.

College graduates are now checking out the financial history of potential mates - "negative dowry" is the new term that describes what they are looking for - and debt-ridden students who in an earlier era would have enrolled in graduate or professional school are beading immediately into the job market. Many critics fear that deht burdens are discouraging students from heading into socially important but low-paying fields like teaching or social work. and that even those who go into the professions will search out the more lucrative areas of their calling. "We certainly won't be rural general practitioners confessed Mr. Usman.

Rising debt levels are seen as a major factor in the declining presence of blacks and other minority group members on the nation's college campuses, and the inevitable problem of high default rates has become a political issue For such reasons, many educators and politicians have begun to call for reforms. "A system that dissuades minority access, twists academic choice, crodes campus participation, undercuts graduate study and generates a billion dollars a year in defaults has something wrong with it," wrote Theodore J. Marchese, vice president of the American Association for Higher Education. To those outside the

seems strange. Universities in most European countries are heavily subsidized, resulting in readily affordable tuitions. In many, students receive state tipends.

American universities receive public subsidies directly in the case of public institutions, indirectly through tax exemptions and deductions in the case of private ones, but students and their families are expected to shoulder a substantial share of the burden. The cost of a year at a public university is now $5,000 to $10,000. The tab at a prestigious private school like Harvard approaches $20,000. Students have traditionally paid for their educa-tion through a variety of means, beginning with current income, family savings, summer jobs and student jobs. For those still facing a gap, financial

Kenya Struggles to Provide the Basics

ESIRIKAN, Kenya — For Geoffrey Letniya, 19, life has taken a turn for the better. Last year, due to the donation of a wheelchair, he was able to "commute" between his mudhut home and the village school. And this year, he is a candidate for a place in a secondary school because of his good exam results.

Geoffrey considers himself fortunate, for educational and medical services, considered the right of every child in Western countries, remain clusive for many children in black Africa, where per capita gross domestic product is static and the social infrastructure is stretched to the limit.

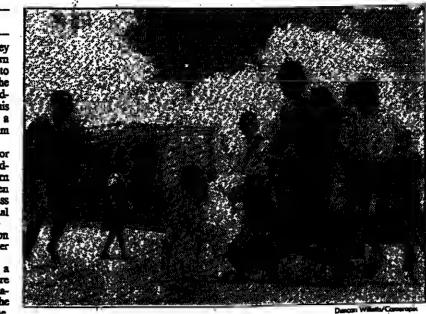

In Kenya, as with countries elsewhere on the continent, national resources filter slowly to the rural areas.

Here in the tiny village of Lesinkan, a dirt street bordered by six dwellings, there appears to be an unbridgeable chasm sepa-rating its inhabitants from the rest of the world. There is no electricity, no telephone, no motorized transport and very little wa-

By tradition, the Samburu people who live here are nomads who range the arid plains tending their cattle, camels and goats. Many have settled more or less permanently, bending to the dictates of a face-less bureaucracy in the distant capital of Nairobi, about 200 miles (320 kilometers) to the south. Yet in other directions, the cutting edge of change has been blunted by government apathy and lack of funds. The people's oceds are basic but mostly unfulfilled. Richard Langat, headmaster of the primary school, asks for textbooks --one copy for the teacher will do, he says modestly --- and old newspapers, no matter how dated.

Last year, the community held a haram-bee (Swahili for "let's pull together") to raise money for a new wooden schoolhouse on a hillock next to the church. Like many small communities, Lesirikan must resort to its own limited resources to raise its standard of living. The village school stands below a dry watercourse and is flooded once a year when the rains fall. The compound consists of a handful of one-room buildings made from roughcut poles. The students' wobbly benches and tables stand on a dirt floor. Pencils, pens and paper are treasured since they are hard to come by.

During his eight years of primary educa-tion, Geoffrey fived at the school and returned home once a year. He made the 15mile journey by crawing on his hands and knees. His legs were wasted by a childhood bout of polio, for there was no immunization service at the time.

Lesirikan's problems are mirrored in both rural and urban areas throughout Kenya, and the authorities have acknowledged a critical gap between expectation and reality but have not put forward any solutions. This year's education allotment of $375 million will be pruned by 6 percent, Prospects for Kenya's 4.5 million prima ry school children are bleak. Comp titica to place youngsters in the country's 10,000 primary schools is fierce, particularly in the overcrowded cities.

Last year, for instance, 11,000 Nairobi children, ready to begin their schooling, were left out of the educational system simply because there was no place to put them. The oumber of Nairobi children refused permission to start school will climb to 44,000 by 1990.

As a result, in January, when the school year begins, anxions parents camp overnight outside school gates just to acquire an application form, since government policy is to admit children on a first-come, firstserve basis.

For primary school graduates who want to continue their education, finding a place in secondary school is also difficult. Last year less than a third of the 160,000 pupils who passed their entrance exams to second-ary schools found a place in a state school. In Nairobi, which has the greatest concentration of schools, only one of every four children will find a place. The rest will either attend inadequately equipped self-help schools or simply end their schooling. while those parents who can afford to will send their children to one of the country's few private schools. University competition is equally fierce. The University of Nairobi only admits 2,000 new students each year although two fledgling universities will be able to soak up more secondary school graduates once they get fully under way.

Since independence nearly a quarter of a century ago, Kenya has prided itself on its universal and free primary education. Now all this is changing drastically. This year, for the first lime, parents in Nairobi will have to pay a $1.90 levy for each school term that their child attends. There are three terms in a school year. Coupled with bills for books, uniforms and the ever-present "building fund," this puts the privilege of education well beyond the reach of the growing number of urban poor. Much of the problem stems from the country's 4.1 percent annual population growth rate, the fastest in the world. The traditional birthright of land tenure for evcry adult male can no longer be fuifilled, resulting in an urban drift of over 7 percent year. Nairobi's population is growing by 11 percent.

More than 300,000 school-leavers come into the job market annually, many of them 13-year-old primary school graduates.

Last year, however, only 18,000 new jobs the line of the manufacturing sector. Demands for employment will accelerate in the future rather than abate since nearly half of Kenya's population of 20 million is under 15. In 15 years' time, only 12 percent of the labor force will be formally employed, over half of them in the bloated civil service.

Mr. Brizola said the program is a key part of his "dark socialism" proposal for an egalitarian social system to redistribute wealth and benefits to the majority of poor, mostly black and dark-skinned Brazilians. "I call our program an archaic revolution," said Mr. Ribeiro, an anthropologist and a former edu- cation minister, "because we are struggling to create here an edu- cation system that other coun- tries achieved a long time ago." Elected in 1982, Mr. Brizola inherited a school system long lavished with bold rhetoric and what Mr. Ribeiro called "dishon-	nepotism because the firm that carried out the design and manu- facture of the schools was headed by his son, João Otávio, an archi- tect. Finally, Mr. Brizola and Mr. Ribeiro were upbraided for fall- ing far short of their vow to open 500 CHEPs before their term of office ends on March 15. Only 189 are now functioning. Mr. Ribeiro said, however, that if construction contracts were bonored, 300 schools would be completed and furnished by March 15 and the remaining 200 would be mostly finished. But few attacked the education program outright. Although it is far too early to pass judgment, statistics for the first full academ- ic year show that 85 percent of the CHEP students in the first four grades passed — at least 35 per- cent higher than in the school system as a whole. India Sets Up Informal Schools

By Nilova Roy

EW DELHI - A project that could climinate illiteracy for hundreds of millions of Indians is under way in villages on the outskirts of Pabal, a remote town in the western state of Maharashtra. Conducted by the Institute of Education in Poona and the Bhabha Center for Science Education, a research center funded by an industrial group in Bombay, the project involves rural and suburban families. The class-es, limited to 20 students at a time, are conducted from 6:30 to 9:30 every evening by teachers trained by the institutes.

The instructor, often a member of the community, sits in a circle with the group and teaches by means of songs, folk tales and conversations to which the stadents can relate personally. The instructor might use the village pond for example, to teach about physics, hygiene, population con-trol and arithmetic.

The classes are held in a central , location, often the temple court-yard or under a banyan tree or in an unused shed

~ The primary course, equivalent to fourth-grade standards, is about 1,200 hours of instruction. . The attendance rate in what the government calls "nonformal centers," like the one in Pabal, has been over 80 percent, compared with 30 percent to 40 percent attendance rates in primary schools in sural India.

In addition, the dropout rate is 10 percent or less, while formal schools in the district have recorded a dropout rate of more than 50 percent before children reached fifth grade. A recent survey by the government showed that 75 percent of pupils drop out of schools by the eighth grade, More than 70 percent of hrdia's population lives in rural areas, and it is here that the thrust of the government's new policy on education has been directed.

That policy, adopted by the government of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi late last year, sets 1990 as the target date for assuring a basic educational standard for all children up to 14 years of

P.L. Malhotra, director of the National Council for Educational Research and Training, who helped formulate the policy and is deeply involved in its imple-mentation, said: "Equity with excellence is the main thrust of the new policy, not equity versus ex-cellence. First, like a pyramid, we are concentrating on the base, getting a sound education for ev-eryone. Opportunities for higher studies exist for those who want it, but we would like those genuincly interested in academics."

He added: "Thus far the atti-tude toward education has been just to get people literate, but now the thrust is on developing an all-round education, teaching a person the need to plan his family size, the need for cleanliness and so on. Now there is great possibility for a quantum jump in the sphere of education." "We are concentrating on the primary stage, because that is where the country's future lies," said Jaya Pillai, an educator. "It is vital that a child should learn concepts and inquisitiveness and the need to be self-reliant and appreciate the small family norm, nature around him and so on." Currently, about 450 million people or nearly 60 percent of the population is illiterate, World Bank reports estimate that India will surpass China in having the highest rate of illiteracy in the world by the turn of the century.

The church, however, thinks she will be ready in time for the municipal elections in July. The literacy program is held two hours daily, five days a week for six months. Each center has a maximum of 20 students. De-sarmes currently has 14 students, ranging in age from 19 to 45.

Haitians went to the centers, and the church contends that 60 percent of them can now read and write.

"Lame," everyone shouled . "That's right," said Mr. Philistine, pointing to the word syllable by syllable. "La May, You know them. Now you can write their name."

He works from a book developed by the church to teach literacy in Creole. The book encourages political discussion. The chapter titles include vote, participate, uproot, orga-nize, community and liberty. The book has now been accepted as a national textbook.

The Alpha centers are always in Creole, the first language of all Haitians. This is in itself an innovation because all other Haitian schools are in French. In rural areas, the teachers simply memorize the lesson since they are often incapable themselves of conversing in French, Most newspapers are in French and government announcements are generally in French even though the ruling class has Creole as its first language.

In addition, the Alpha program is free. One of the major causes of illiteracy in Haiti is the cost of schooling. Although rural schools cost as little as three dollars a year, this is more than many Haitians can ufford for their large families. The church estimates that the average Artibonite farmer earns a dollar and two meals for a dav's work

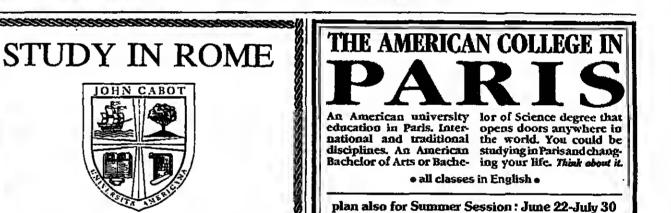

Once the basic program is in full operation, Father Grandoit pluns a "post-literacy phase" in French, Spanish or English. He considers continuing education vital, "If you don't, they will return in illiteracy." But he admits that qualified teachers for this would be far more difficult to find and the budget would have to go far over the designated $25 million.

However, even if only the basic literacy drive succeeds, it would create a far higher literacy rate than Haiti has ever known, and this in itself could be a revolution.

Students in Desarmes were asked what they would dn with their new skill. Luciem Latorti, 45, who at last can now slowly write her name, said that she had onticed that merchants had been quoting her false prices and she now does not let them get away with it.

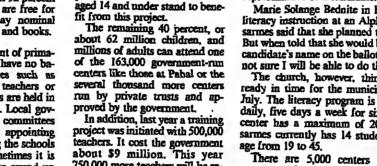

And Jean Max, 19, said that after he can read, "When they arrest me, I will be able to read the charges,

Tough U.K. Minister Makes Mark as Troubleshooter

On Political Front Lines

By Barry Hugill

TONDON - It is 13 years since Margaret Thatcher became leader of the Conservative Party. She won the leadership because of her commitment to no-nonsense, right-wing politics of the type that a majority of her fellow Tory MPs thought lacking in former Prime Minis-ter Edward Heath, whom she easily heat in the election for the top job.

This much is well known. What is often forgotten is the path that Mrs. Thatcher took to the leadership of the party and, eventually, her country.

Before becoming prime minister, her most important job in government was as minister of education, where she made a reputation as a hard-nosed administrator who would not accept any nonsense from the teachers' union A critic of her in the early 1970s was Kenneth Baker, now her minister of education, but at that time a fierce Heathite. Although excluded from her first administration, in the early-1980s he was given the relatively junior post of minister of information technology. He impressed Mrs. Thatcher with his work there and was eventually given the local government portfolio with the brief of getting rid of the leader of the Greater London Council, Ken Livingstone, who had made his brand of municipal socialism popular with Londoners.

The two men fought an honorable draw, the contest ending when the government, by law, scrapped the Greater London Council and put Mr. Livingstone on the sidelines. But Mr. Baker had made his mark as a troubleshooter. By the middle of last year, Mrs. Thatcher had major problems with the teachers' unions. In pursuit of a wage claim, the teachers were refusing to take classes for absent colleagues, artend any meeting with parents, organize out-of-card d'Estaing, were no excep-side. A common theory was that

ly trusted the rightist governschool activities for pupils and prepare or grade lessons after school hours. In some cases, they took part in limited strike action.

They had in their armory one secret weapon: Sir Keith Joseph, the education minister. In private a kind and considerate man, Sir Keith was a political disaster. He appeared unconcerned and inflexible.

Opinion polls showed that parents backed the teachers. The Labor Party seemed certain to gain if the dispute went on, so Sir Keith had to go.

When, last May, Mr. Baker was given the job, he confided to close friends that his priority was to "put out fires." But within eight months, he has es-tablished himself as a front-cunner to succeed Mrs. Thatcher. Learning from the prime minister in her days at the Department of Education and Science, he has stood up to the unions.

In England and Wales (Scotland has a different education system), there are six teachers' unions, A skillful politician divides and roles. Sir Keith did the near impossible and united them in a common cause. Mr. Baker has created a division between the largest and most militant union, the National Union of Teachers, and three of the other unions. And he has effectively isolated the scoond largest and often troublesome National Association of Schoolmasters, which is pursuing an egalitarian salary policy that is anathema to its five rivals. Mr. Baker is now set to impose his own pay deal via parliamentary legisla-tion. He has arbitrarily removed the cumbersome and bureaucratic Burnham Committee, which for years was the forum in which teachers' pay was negotiated. In the future, the unions will have to make any pay claim to an advisory committee appointed by and an-swerable to the minister of education. His decision will be final.

Now the minister is turning his attention to the curriculum.

England's education system is divided between local authorities and the central government. Since 1944, what is the tangent in schools has been the preserve

The government has always had a say, but in the final analysis, it has no power to instruct an education authority in what should or should not be taught. But not for much longer.

Mr. Baker wants a national curries hum, and he is paving the way by high-lighting the misdeeds of a number of Labor Party-controlled education anthorities who have adopted aggressive "anti-heterosexist" policies in an altempt to promote a "positive image of gay men and women."

Given the concern about AIDS, it is a popular cause and Mr. Baker could well get his way. a de para

But the arrival of the left in power under President François Mitterrand in May 1981 proved that that argument had little validity. Indeed, it was under France's first leftist government in 23 years that many traditional values were finally reintroduced to the classroom. The real trouble for the Socialist government began in February 1983 when medical students staged massive demonstrations over a new law to extend their already long period of study. It had repercussions in the country's health service as bospital staff staged protests and worked to rule in sympathy.

Then, in April of the same year, thousands marched to protest a university reform law proposed by Education Minister Alam Savary. It sought to make higher education more suited to economic life outside the academic world. It also simed to introduce a form of selection at the end of the second year of university.

Admission to the third year was to be limited by universities' abilities to accommodate students and by estimates of the foresceable number of jobs for any given discipline.

The reform was criticized by both left and right, on the one hand for institutionalizing selection and on the other for the cost of educating all comers for two forms

The rallying cry for the private school supporters was the "Ecole years with little to show for it at the end

The law also tightened central control over the universities, taking back some of the autonomy granted after the 1968 riots. It put student representation on university administrative councils at between 15 percent and 25 percent, down from the 1968 level of 30 percent.

Confronted by 1,500 amend-ments from the opposition in May 1983, Mr. Savary invoked emergency debate procedures in the National Assembly to ensure its passage with reduced time for discussion

Shortly after, however, Mr. Savary tried to introduce a reform of high schools that was to bring about his downfall. That reform stemmed from what one French commentator called "France's oldest war," one going back nearly 200 years to the French Revointion, over who should teach French children and how, and bitter, at times bringing up to one million protesters to the streets.

However, these protesters were often the middle-class parents of high school students or clerics, not the fiery student activists of carlier demonstrations. Other marchers backed the Savary re-education system. But he had decreed in 1882 that primary education was to be "free, nonclerical and obligatory." However, the Catholic Church and conservative Frenchmen never have permitted the private schools to disappear. The Savary law did not call for to destroy them. In March 1984, Cardinal Jean-Marie Lustiger, the archbishop of Paris, appealed to politicians

The public debate was long "not to let yourselves awaken an excessively old and sterile quarrel that would victimize mostly youth itself."

The bill was passed two months later in the National Assembly when the opposition failed to bring down the government in a consure vote on the issue. But it was never coacted.

adults are going back to school. "A lot of people used to say, 'I've got my education," noted William Dra-86 ves, national coordinator of the wife gathering oovices in her kitchen to make tortes to the nation's most prestigious institu-tions of higher education cashing in on the boom. Within the diversity are two connecting threads: The learners are seeking richer, fuller lives and the teaching institutions have found a student body that can pay its own way, with little need for scholarship aid.

In October, the Department of Education reported that it found more than 23 million adults, almost 14 percent of the adult pop-ulation, taking some kind of for-mal course. This included those trying to get through basic reading and arithmetic to those working on their second professional

But most of the adult part-time students are back in the classroom not to get a degree but to get ahead - economically, so-cially or intellectually. Public and private schools are responding to this demand by adding to their traditional adult education programs courses that are aimed at more sophisticated students. Chinese history is the most popular course now offered in the adult program at Great Neck, Long Island.

Virtually every large and medium-sized museum oow has a formal education program, said Patterson Williams of the Denver Art Museum, chairman of the American Association of Museums' committee on education. The Institute for Contemporary Photography in New York runs sessions in "Travel Photography" and "Making Better Portraits." The Smithsonian in Washington this winter is lumping lectures by such diverse talents as Lioda Bird Johnson Robb, Stanley Marcus and Bob by Inman in a course called

"Conversations With Texans." Mr. Droves's Learning Resources Network oversees a string of cooperative enterprises nationwide in which any would-be teacher can offer a "course" in almost anything at all.

An entrepreceur, William Zanker, has taken the same idea and not it on a commercial basis His Learning Annex, a publicly traded company, operates in a dozen big cities, with instruction in foreign languages, poblic speaking, computers and belly dancing.

Mr. Zanker calls the Learning Annex a "disco of the mind," and there is no disguising the fact that for many who pay $50 for four sessions to learn French, the "language of love," the chance to ac-quire new skills is equaled in importance by the chance to meet a compatible fellow student.

Those twinned appeals concern more conventional educational institutions, too. Of the 5,000 or so adults taking courses part-time at the University of Tennessee, "at least 50 percent are divorced," said Jeffrey Secula, associate director of the eve ning school. Many are looking for new job skills, either to earn their own way or to use their new freedom to start a oew career. But, Mr. Secula said, the likelihood of meeting other single adults with similar interests is a big draw.

Technological changes mean that some of the jobs that adults originally trained for are disappearing and that in others the skills learned in undergraduate days will no longer suffice. This has spurred many adults to return to school to improve their skills. However, many interviewed in the Education Department survey said that they are looking for a new dimension to their life. "The population is becoming more educated, and education begets education," noted Nancy Gadbow, professor of adult education at Syracuse University. This is particularly true of the adult education programs aimed at retirees. Case Western Reserve University, for example, runs three 12-week seminars each year that promise no papers, no exams, but no pandering in the instruction from some of the top names at the institution.

Probably the most spectacular success in offering continuing education to retirees is the Elderhostle movement. Adapted from the folk schools of Scandingvia, the group brought 200 older people to five courses in 1975 and expects to draw 136,000 this year.

Not very long ago, few educational institutions showed much interest in students over 21. But schools that were geared up for the baby boom generation now are looking for students.

"The schools need the adults, they need their money, so oow they are okay," Mr. Gadbow said. Federal projections show that by the end of this decade, 18 percent of all college students will be over 35, a 50-percent jump from the 1980 figure. Almost all adult education programs are self-sustaining. Included in the costs that the enrollment fees cover are overhead expenses that otherwise would have to be handled by a school's general budget.

"The buildings are oot being used, but the lights are on, the heat is on or the air conditioning is on," ooled Donna Stephenson, a University of Massachusetts counselor who works exclusively with adult students.

The fees help with faculty salaries, too. Usually, credit courses are considered part of the oormal teaching load, so the fees can go to the school treasury. Teachers get paid extra for taking on the ooncredit assignments, providing "a way in which the faculty can add to their income and keep afloat," said Ellis Turner, head of the continuing education pro-gram at Sidwell Friends. The extra income can be decisive in recruiting and retaining tow-paid junior faculty members. The adult courses provide a public relations bonanza, lining up local support for a school among citizens who might otherwise have little contact with it. And the schools know that a few of the adult part-timers will get so hooked that they will decide to turn themselves into what the institutions oeed most: degree-seeking, tuition-paying, fulltime students.

Call for Reform Japanese See Crisis Of Mediocrity in System

By Christine Chapman

JOKYO - While the United States is considering how to emulate Japan's public school education, Japan is admitting that a crisis exists in its long successful system. The call for reform is being made by Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone and is supported by the Ministry of Education. Nikkyoso, the Japan teachers' union, has attacked the recommendations as elitist, charging that they are politically self-serving for the nister and the ruling Liberal Democratic Party. The country is aroused emotionally in a controversy over the basic philosophy of Japanese schooling and its practical results. The system of secondary education is seen by the reformers as too egalitarian to turn out the creative people necessary to keep Japan in the forefront of technological development. They want to put the emphasis on the individual student.

In April 1984, Mr. Nakasone appointed a 25member panel of prominent educators and business-men to re-examine policy and introduce change. To date, the National Council on Educational Reform, also known as the Ad Hoc Council, has submitted three reports full of general ideas but little that amounts to a concrete program of reform.

The reports stress the "state of desolation" in education and label its schools "in crisis." The average program of junior high schools and high schools are judged to be insufficient to turn out students who can pass university entrance examinations without enduring special cramming courses.

The resulting pressure has caused an increasing "school phobia" among pupils. Related problems are persistent bullying among students and the sometimes overheated physical discipline by teachers. During the first 11 months of 1986, 723 children

They are cess of China's economic modthus ill-prepared to accept an academic environment that rewards ernization, the architects of merit and favors competition > anism continues to shape the expectations and values of youth.

Experiments that allow students to find jobs by direct contacts with work units have tended to favor students at the elite universities. They have already fueled widespread student resentment at the less prestigious institutions where jobs continue to be allocated according to the state plan. The straining of already inadequate university facilities to accommodate a dramatic increase in student enrollment from 856.000 in 1978 to 1.6 million in 1985 has already taken a heavy toll on the quality of higher education.

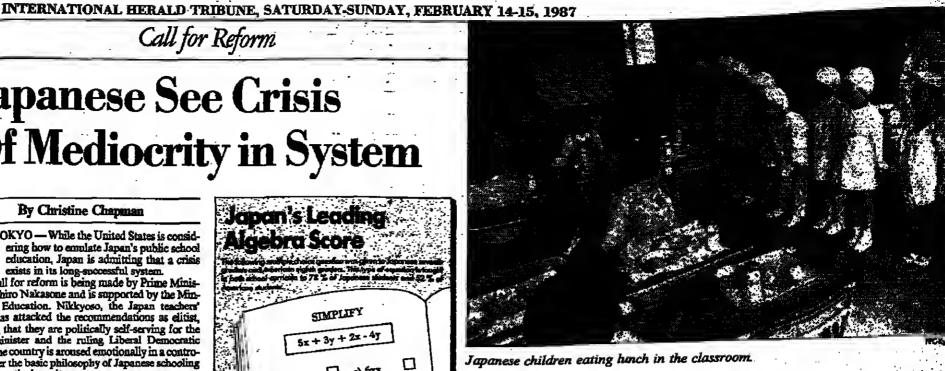

This sacrifice of quality has not gone numoticed. Student complaints of crowded living condi-

Even as party conservatives continue to wage ideological warfare on the reforms, shutent dissatisfaction with the educational system is not likely to disappear. Behind it is a growing awa that inequalities in the new edu-cational system only minor larger contradictions in China's economic modernization drive. This awareness will put mounting pressure on China's leaders to aocelerate the pace of reform and distribute the benefits more equally. 10.11

Underlying this record of national literacy is the American imposed egalitarian principle on which postwar education was based: All pupils through junior high school were to get the same education. But now, individuality has come back in. The Ad Hoc Council hopes to foster creativity, thinking ability, choice and flexibility, lifelong learning, international-ization and coping with the information age. Former Minister of Education Michio Nagai, who is now a senior adviser to United Nations University in Tokyo, said in an interview: "Catching up with the West was a core philosophy of Japanese secondary education. Japan advanced in a uniform and egalitarian way, but education was not individualistic enough to prepare students to invent or create." The impetus for change has also come from business leaders who fear being left behind, internationally, in technological research.

The committee also recommends introducing moral education classes and improving the quality of teachers through retraining or apprenticeships, with supervision by older, perhaps retired teachers. It is these two points that rile the Japan Teachers' Union.

Teaching ethics reflects the prime minister's "new nationalism," said Ichiro Tanaka, head of the union. The teacher reforms and at creating "government-controlled instructors," he said.

The central fact of life and education in Japan is petting into the best university. There is a decided bierarchy of prestigious schools, with the University of Tokyo at the top. Parents spend large situs to send their children to juke, or after-school cram schools, to prepare for entrance examinations.

During the January-February national university examination season, there has been a change in the number of subjects the students are tested in, a drop from seven to five. The number of public colleges they can apply to has been increased to three. These modest changes to broaden the system have encouraged more students to take the examinations. In annary, 390,000 students, almost double last year's candidates, took the first of two rounds of tests. Only one in six was expected to pass.

G-5 or Not G-5? Right Now, That Is Not the Question

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

EW YORK --- The United States is still going round and round in a clumsy waltz with its partners in Japan, West Germany, France and Britain over when to hold the next Group of Five meeting. At the start of the week, Treasury secretary James A. Baker 3d said that no special G-5 meeting had been scheduled, alarming the foreign-exchange markets.

As of Thursday, a Treasury spokesman said, there was still no ...meeting scheduled because it was so hard to get everybody together

Japan's finance minister, Kiichi Miyazawa, had to present legislation to the parliament; West Germany's finance minister,

Strains in the

Gerhard Stoltenberg, had to help Chancellor Helmut Kohl negotiate a new coalition gov-emment and Mr. Baker had to so before the Senate Finance Committee next week to testify on "competitiveness" legislation

While acceptance of these explanations for the delay is not quite in a class with belief not quite in a class with Dener in the tooth fairy, the main obstacle to a meeting has been a lack of substantive agreement. Mr. Baker himself has said a meeting should be held only if it could be expected to be "successful." A meeting that failed could cause havoc in the markets. But is a successful deal negotiable at this point? Mr. Baker has inot made public just what he is trying to negotiate. From earlier discussions with Mr. Baker, it appears that he

If the dollar fell to its lower limit, would this imply intervention, and by whom? Would there be clear rules and who would enforce them? What if enormous currency flows in the markets threatened to overwhelm government intervention? Would there then be multilateral decisions on currency devaluations or appreciations? Would the new system prevent crises or breed them? Would it involve agreements on underlying monetary or fiscal policy?

AT A SYMPOSIUM at the American Enterprise Institute in Washington, Herbert Stein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under President Richard M. Nixon, said that no "acceptable, implementable basis for agreement" on "target or reference zones had been found, despite years of

He warned that "the persistent search for agreement where the "basis for agreement is clusive may irritate relations among "nations that should be friends or, at least, allies."

Relations between the United States and its allies have indeed been irritated. The Americans feel that the Europeans and the Japanese have pursued their own trade advantages, thrusting the burden of promoting world economic expansion on the United States, while the others feel that the United States, by its fiscal irresponsibility, has created its own trade and economic troubles. Nobody trusts anybody else.

The Europeans feel they have been burned too often, and the United States thinks it has suffered at the hands of Japan and West Germany too often. These strains in the alliance lie at the heart of the troubled international monetary system.

Mr. Baker has been trying to provide the leadership required to strengthen the economic alliance and the world economy, but it is I SUCCES President Ronald Reagan. This will be essential to gain the cooperation of other national leaders and electorates. But Mr. Reagan, ensuarled in the Iran affair, has scarcely taken a hand in the currency crisis. Unless he does, the agreement Mr. Baker seeks may be beyond reach.

Producer Prices, Factory Output Climb in U.S.

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches rates to fall among most industrial-ized nations. Since December, WASHINGTON - The U.S. economy showed signs nf reinflation as the government reported when OPEC agreed on a new set of quntas, prices have rebounded to around $18, retriggering inflation Friday that wholesale prices rose a sharp 0.6 percent in January com-pared with December while industrial production increased for the fourth consecutive month.

The Labor Department said that the gain in wholesale prices, the steepest since since Nnvember 1985, was the result of soaring energy costs. The price of gasoline, for example, climbed 18 percent, the sharpest increase since recordkeeping began in 1947. Producer prices slipped 0.1 percent in December.

Meanwhile, the Federal Reserve Board said that production at U.S. factories, mines and utilities rose a solid 0.4 percent in January com-pared with December, when they rose 0.3 percent. The December gain had originally been reported as 0.5 percent.

Economists expect that the combination of rising energy costs, higher import prices and improved economic performance — as per-haps signaled by the industrial output figure — will rekindle inflation. Inflation was just 1.1 percent last year, a 25-year low, largely because of slumping oil prices and the high value of the dollar, which made imports inexpensive. The dollar has weakened considerably since then. Energy prices rose last month more steeply than they have since 1979, when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries im-posed its last boycott. Besides the rise in gasoline prices, costs of home heating oil increased 15.7 percent and natural gas prices advanced 4,2 percent. Economisus suggested the increases would have been even steeper had it oot been for an unusually mild winter.

DVORAK IN LOVE

By Josef Skvorecky. Translated from the Czech by Paul Wilson. 322 pages. $18.95. Alfred A. Knopf, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N..Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Walter Goodman

T HE title of Josef Skvorecky's anecdotal new novel refers not only to Anton Dvorak's love for the beautiful elder sister of the woman he married, but also to his more froitful love for the folk tunes, spirituals and jazz that captured him on his visit to the United States in the 1890s. Just as the Crech composer incorporated such themes into his "New World" Symphony, so Skvorecky, a Czechoslovak author, brings to this "first attempt at writing a historical and biographical novel" echoes of Ameri-can writers of the period from Bret Harte to William Dean Howells, with a nod to the E.L. Doctorow of "Ragtime."

set of exercises showing what its composer can do set of exercises intriving what its composed can be with three-of-the-century American types. The reminiscences come mainly from Jeannette Thurber, the New York arts patron who paid Dvo-rak's way to the United States in 1892, and her emissary, Adele Margulies; from Josephine (Jose-fina Cermakova) the love of his life, who rejected the musician for a count, and her sister, Anna, who nabbed him on the rebound, and from Otilya, their romantically inclined daughter, who finds herself in love with two of poppa's protégés at the same time. Skvorecky being a natural storyteller, his anec-dotes often sing. It's like being at a tavern table, under the spell of someone like the Dvorak presented here, beer-guzzler, dumpling-gobbler, cigar-puff-er and all-round good fellow. The anthor gives us, among many treats, a happy tale about a baritone doing "Don Juan" in a Canadian production that skimped on its trap door. When the big fellow gets cent into the nethe counted here and whether the sight of Rosemary Vanderbilt skinny-dipping in the moonlight on Tur-key River inspired the opera "Rusalka" may be doubted, but they make first-rate yarns. Skvorecky's descriptions of how America's sounds might have registered on Dvorak and of his music itself ring true. Here is Adele's recollection of the premiere of the "New World" Symphony in 1893: "The major semicircles described by the ba-1893: "The major semicircles described by the ba-ton, the full, unerring harmony of the deep strings — God knows why he loved them so deep — the slow adagio descending to the velvet encounter with the clarinet in its lowest register, the resounding bassoons, then the profound mystery, suddenly bro-ken by the lonesome call of the French homs in unison, a prefiguration of the magnificent air in the second movement, the call of beauty above the broad distances of our beautiful continent."

But there are also passages that might have come from one of those Hollywood movies about a great composer in a fit of inspiration. The black monscian Harty T. Burleigh recalls singing to Dvorak "the song my granddaddy used to sing when they whipped him: 'I'm troubled, I'm troubled.' The Master listened, his head bowed to his chest, but all

She looked into his eyes and held up her lips. He swallowed. And then, she finally got what she had worked so hard to get." Adele's lover, the black musician and ladies' man Will Marion Cook and the critic lames Humeher mounts to be a low more missician and ladies' man Will Marion Cook and the critic James Huncker promise to be a lot more interesting than they ever become. The solidest character is Dvorak's wife, Anna, who knows what slic wants and how to get it. As for the Master bimself, there is enough here of his manner or want of manners in handling students, admirers and origin to make any source of the manner of want critics to make us want more. Having sketched a very complicated simple man, Skvorecky doesn't fill in the shadows.

North Korea, Evidence Seen Mounting That Soviet Hockey Is Declining HOC Meeting On '88 Ends Inconclusively

Compiles by Our Staff From Disp. LAUSANNE, Switzerland -The meeting between North Korea Binghans of Atta and the loternational Olympic Committee that was to resolve Pyongyang's involvement in the 1988 Games in Scoul has ended inconclusively.

The IOC president, Juan Anto-nio Samaranch, said Thursday night the North Koreans had "agreed in principle" to accept a plan, drawn up more than six months ago, that would move the archery and table tennis events to the North, allow the road race in cycling to begin there and finish in South Korea, and give the North one of four groups of the soccer - 43 -But Kim Ya San, president of the North Korean Olympic Committee, said Thursday that proposal was too small" and that his country would demand to host five or six more sports before dropping its threat to lead an East-bloc boycott. [Friday evening, Samaranch said that the IOC "cannot offer some-1.2 thing more," United Press Interna-10 tional reported from Lausanne. 1 3 2 2 "I think the offer we made to the North Koreans was both historical and very generous. There could be minor ch minor changes, but we cannot go beyond that," Samaranch said.] North Korea, in return for the

2014 4.2.2 four sports, had been asked to drop inds for an equal share of the Games, and to agree to open its borders to coaches, trainers, athletes and all other members of the Olympic organizations. "The acceptance is in principle, not unconditional," Kim said after his delegation and the IOC executive board had met for almost two Samaranch said a fourth meeting among the IOC, North Korea and South Korea would be called sometime this year."

Adding that "always, there can be small changes" in the plan, he said the fourth meeting would deal with the "arrangement of details." Samaranch had said repeatedly that he would not call a fourth meeting until North Korea formaly accepted the IOC plan, which booth Korea had quickly accepted. After the meeting in June, Sa-maranch had said the four sports were as many as the IOC was willing to move. Asked Thursday if he expected North Korea to ask for.

QUEBEC CITY - The National Hockey League all-stars' 4-3 victory in the first game of the two-part Rendez-Vous '87 series is being taken as one more bit of evidence in a growing file that indicates the Soviet Union no longer is all-powerfai on the ice.

It was beaten by Canada in the 1984 Challenge Cup, lost to Czechoslovakia in both the 1985 world championships and the recent Calgary Cup and even dropped a game to Finland on home ice in the Izvestia Cup in December. The Soviet junior team was embarrassed in Prague in January, posting a sub-.500 record before being expelled for its hrawi against Canada.

Although nobody is relegating the Soviet Union to second-class hockey citizenship, it is apparent that the rest of the world no longer holds it in awe. And when it comes to facing NHL players, as it did Wednesday night and was to again Friday night, the Soviet national team cannot count, as it once did, on a big edge in speed and conditioning. The conditioning level of NHL players is much better now than it was in 1979," said Scotty

Bowman, who coached the losing NHL team in the Soviet team has been lacking that big confi-the Challenge Cup that year. "It became an endur-ance test, with three games in four nights, and our "Since Tretiak's decision, they haven't had the "NHL team that was unsure of its potential, the guys couldn't keep up with them.

We don't see such fast-paced games very often. But now, with all the offseason work and off-ice exercises, we're capable of playing at a higher tempo and that aspect of their advantage is gone. They used to have a big offensive machine and if their defense wasn't that strong, they emphasized possession and attained it through conditioning and stated and speed

"Recently, they've been surprised and beaten by lesser teams, and I think they've looked at their program and tried to improve their defense. But to brogram and tried to improve their defense, but to do it, they had to give up something and, from last might's game, I'd have to say it was forechecking. They didn't put up much sustained pressure and we had an easy time coming out of our end."

Goaltending is a key to strong pressure at the other end. A team with confidence in its goalie, such as the Soviet team with Vladislav Trenak or the Edmonton Oilers with Grant Fuhr, can go allout offensively and count on the goalie to make the big stops. Since Tretiak retired in 1984, however,

"Since Tretiak's decision, they haven't had the goaltending and they haven't had the confidence," said Ted Sator, the Buffalo Sabres' coach, and another interested observer at the Soviet practice Thursday. "The 'KLM Line' is just as good as it was, but other countries have caught up and it was interesting last night that when the Soviets tried to make the NHL play at a faster tempo than they're used to, they couldn't do it."

The powerful KLM line is named for its components, Vladimir Krutov, Igor Larionov and Sergei

In this series, the Soviet Union is depending on the goal tending of Evgeny Belosheykin, 20. And, although he made some excellent saves Wednesday, he lacks experience and shows a tendency to Soviet players instead were engaging in a feelingout process.

A lack of competition has never affected the Soviet team in the past, but it could become a problem now. The players have grown so accustomed to breezing past outmanned opponents that they now have a difficult time preparing for the big

Competition is virtually nonexistent in the Soviet National League, where the Central Red Army team, which attracts most of the good players, has won 10 straight championships and currently holds first place with a 28-1-1 record. Until recently, international tournaments were much the same, with the Soviet teams overpowering those of nations whose best players were off competing in the NHI.

Still, a one-goal defeat on a small, foreign rink cannot be considered as beralding the imminent downfall of a dynasty that has won 20 world championships in 33 years. The Soviet teams normeters) wider and the smaller NHL rinks severely inhibit their passing game.

"This didn't look like an end-all for them last night," Bowman said. "This is a proving ground. shooting over there,

"The Olympics next year is the biggest tournament for them. There, the odds are good, because so many of the good players from other countries won't be able to play.

Others thought it would be interesting to see whether Viktor Tikhonov, the Soviet national coach for 10 years, will be in Calgary for the 1988 Olympics if he should lose another game to the NHL. Already there is speculation that the unaccustomed defeats of recent years are not being accepted gracefully in Moscow.

"I don't know when they've ever lost two games in a row," Sator said. "When you lose one game a year over there, you're in trouble. Can't you imag-ine them calling him in and saying, 'Viktor, we've been reviewing your record and you've lost five games in five years. You're through."

Further evidence that the Soviet players are somewhat lacking in confidence was their slow mally play on an ice surface that is 15 feet (4,5

Lendl was in Washington as a favor to his management group, ProServ, which manages a local tournament each summer, the Sov-ran-D.C. National Bank Classic. ProServ was trying to raise money to convert some clay courts at Rock Creek Park to hard courts in hopes of attracting better fields for its tournament. The reasoning is that with the U.S. Open now played on hard courts, the top pro-fessionals do not want to come to sweltering Washington in July to play in a clay court tournament. So, Lendl and Gomez, both Pro-Serv clients, came to the capital to whack the ball around for a while. while others paid $30 to $60 each to

POSTCARD The Battle of Boulder

By Thomas J. Knudson New York Timer Service BOULDER, Colorado - De-pending on the point of view, this city's new urban design plan is either a visionary document that will protect historical architecture or a quagmire of uonecessary guidelines reminiscent of the antibusiness attitudes here in the 1960s.

The document has drawn criticism from some citizens and public officials who say that it reaches beyond the bounds of urban planning into the arena of style and taste and that it could have a chilling effect on architectural creativity. "Who are we as a city administration to dictate taste and design?" said Annette E. Anderson, one of two City Council members who voted against the plan, which was approved by the couocil last month.

Among other things it discour-ages the use of indoor-outdoor car-peting, stucco building texture, plastic shingles, Astroturf and drive-in windows. Also discouraged as being in poor taste are large parking lots, "New Orleans" style wrought-iron railings, "imitation masonry of any kind," corrugated metal sheeting and "Swiss chalet" style architecture.

Boulder, an eclecticuniversity town 25 miles northwest of Denver, is a community rich in ideas and personal expression and one en-joyed by such diverse personalities as Allen Ginsberg, the poet, and Robert K. Brown, the publisher of Soldier of Fortune magazine.

"I am somewhat surprised at all the attention the plan has been getting," said Terry Ware, an urban planner with the Boulder Department of Planning and Community Development, "I think it goes back to Boulder's image as a somewhat left-of-center, Yuppie-ish, environmentally progressive place." Situated at the base of the east-ern slope of the Rocky Mountains, Boulder has sought, aggressively and often successfully, to preserve its beauty and open spaces. This community is oot occessarily opposed to growth, but it is very concerned about the kind of growth that comes in," said Ron Donahue, Boulder's superintendent of parks. "There is very much a controlled-growth attitude here, with quality of life being the central issue."

debate is the design plan for Boul der's downtown and surrounding neighborhoods. "We want to capi-talize on our assets," said Ed Gawf, director of Boulder's planning department, "and one of those assets is the historic character of our downtown."

The heart of Boulder's downtown is the Pearl Street Pedestrian Mall, built in 1977 and lined by attractive brick buildings constructed in the late 19th century. The idea of the design plan is to encourage new construction and renovation that is compatible with the Victorian architecture.

"Fifteen years ago, we almost lost our downtown," said David Grimm, a spokesman for the city of Boulder. "Businesses had fled and gone to the mails. Then, the pedes-trian mall began to revitalize the area. And it seems what the plan-ning board is saying now with these guidelines is that we've got to pre-serve the quality and charm of that

To that end, Ware said, "what we are really aiming to do is eliminate bad design — those buildings and features that don't work well downtown in terms of appearance and that don't function well in terms of the people using them." Although planners are not re-quired by law to meet the guidelines, they must submit to a review by a five-member board. "What we're hoping to do is by peer pres-sure suggest alternatives," said Ware.

Some people, though think the city has gone too far. "Bonlder wants control over almost every conceivable detail about its fu-ture," said Robert D. Greenlee, the other person on the seven-member City Council who voted against the plan. "I'm just not entirely enthused about city government try-ing to select the color of the wallpaper in the men's room."

The plan does not go that far, but among other things, it favors such natural building materials as wood, brick and stone, instead of the plas-tic, metal and poured concrete commoo in contemporary construction.

The guidelines favor large storefront windows, recessed entries, awnings, ornamental facades and building heights of less than 35 feet in the downtown historical district. f life being the central issue." Small parks and more pedestrian One of the latest wrinkles in that walkways are also encouraged.

The announcer comments: New laws banned marriage and even sex between whites and blacks." So-called colored children (of mixed race) are shown on the screen. "But there they are anyway." Makeba laughs again. There's such a wonderful spirit. Everybody is joking before go-ing on-stage. To work with all these young people who have just come from home - I miss home very much - it's like a dream come true. We can say thanks to the 'Graceland' album and Paul Simon."
